Call for Peace in Venezuela

At this moment, Venezuela and its people are in a nerve-racking situation, gravely threatened by an imminent imperial invasion and by the outbreak of internal violence with the terrible consequences of death and pain that all wars bring.

Venezuelans have historically been a peace loving people, and in peace we have fulfilled our commitment to build a just society, as embodied in our constitution.

We are going through a transformational path with its own characteristics of popular protagonism, that has been harassed in various ways, producing all sort of suffering in large majorities. And now the threat is even greater: direct foreign interference, violence and death.

War has never been the solution to the pains and difficulties of the people or for political differences. A war or invasion in Venezuela would condemn its population to the sad fate that peoples in invaded countries are facing. Today we see war in its most conventional and destructive form stalking our lives.

We Venezuelan women, who day by day work for our motherland, are convinced that the solution will come from the dialogue and the commitment of all, in peace, within the framework of the necessary international respect for self-determination.

We support the initiative of Mexico and Uruguay, and other countries that have joined, to organize an international conference to be held in Montevideo on February 7, to seek a peaceful solution. We place our hopes that dialogue and coexistence will prevail.

We have received many demonstrations of solidarity coming from Our America and the world, these voices rescue international law and comfort us. Thanks very much for so much tenderness.

On the occasion of this week's conference, we ask our sisters and brothers, the women's movements, feminists and dissenting sexualities, social movements and all people to manifest themselves in all possible ways, for dialogue and peace in Venezuela.
